FROM THE DIRECTOR

Dear Members,

Our beautifully installed and much-anticipated exhibition The Jazz Age: American Style in the 1920s opened in late September and is drawing both critical acclaim and brisk attendance. I encourage all our members to see the show sooner rather than later in its run, since many time slots are likely to sell out during its final weeks beginning in mid-December. Across the KeyBank Lobby from The Jazz Age is another exhibition that evokes an entirely different time and place: Beyond Angkor: Cambodian Sculpture from Banteay Chhmar. The show features a massive section of a 12th-century bas-relief lent to the Cleveland Museum of Art by the government of Cambodia.

Ambitious presentations such as these are made possible not only through international cooperation and the efforts of our curators and other staff, but also by the generosity of our supporters. This issue of Cleveland Art celebrates the overwhelming generosity of individuals, families, foundations, corporations, and agencies—each of which plays a critical role in helping the museum carry out its mission both in Cleveland and beyond. We have been profoundly fortunate throughout our history to have had donors who have stood behind and propelled us forward with gifts large and small, to the benefit of our museum and the significant positive impact that we have throughout our region. I wish to take this opportunity to thank each of you, our members, for your past support, as well as for your continued interest in and commitment to the museum and what it stands for.

In addition, I am delighted to report that the Cleveland Museum of Art recently completed a new, ten-year strategic plan—the result of nearly a year of collaboration among our board, staff, and supporters. The plan sets an ambitious agenda for our second century, bringing together art, place, and audience to create engagement and inspire wonder. I urge you to explore the Cleveland Museum of Art's strategic plan, Making Art Matter: A Strategic Framework for Our Second Century, which is available online at clevelandart.org. We look forward to your feedback.

Sincerely,

William M. Griswold

Designing an Earthly Paradise

Enter the richly elegant world of William Morris

EXHIBITION

William Morris: Designing an Earthly Paradise

October 29, 2017–November 11, 2018

Arlene M. and Arthur S. Holden Textile Gallery (234)

In the spring of 1876 the energetic designer William Morris wrote to his friend Aglaia Coronio, “I am drawing patterns so fast that last night I dreamed

I had to draw a sausage; somehow I had to eat it first, which made me anxious about my digestion: however I have just done quite a pretty pattern for printed work.”¹ Morris was in the midst of one of his most productive periods of textile design, and while we do not know which work this anecdote refers to, it was the year he designed Honeysuckle (see p. 5), an archetypal pattern that shows his love of large mirror motifs.

Morris was a poet, craftsman, designer, novelist, businessman, and social activist whose cause of death in 1896 at age 62 a doctor attributed to “simply being William Morris, and having done more work than most ten men.”² The decorative arts firm Morris, Marshall, Faulkner & Co., founded in 1862 and reconstituted as Morris & Co. after 1875, designed and sold household furnishings that were sought after for their elegant, colorful patterns and high-quality materials. Morris insisted on producing goods made under fair labor conditions, which set him apart from many Victorian manufacturers for whom industrialism meant imposing grueling hours and low wages on workers in dangerous factories.

Cory Korkow

Textiles—including embroidery, printed cotton, woven fabrics, tapestries, and carpets—were among the most profitable of the company’s merchandise. Morris was a born pattern maker and looked to both nature and history as a model. Unlike German and Japanese textile designers, or his English competitors, he was inspired not by exotic greenhouse flowers but by the simple blooms of an English garden. The humble marigold, honeysuckle, tulip, and sunflower often joined tangled ivy or sprigs of willow in patterns of great clarity and charm.

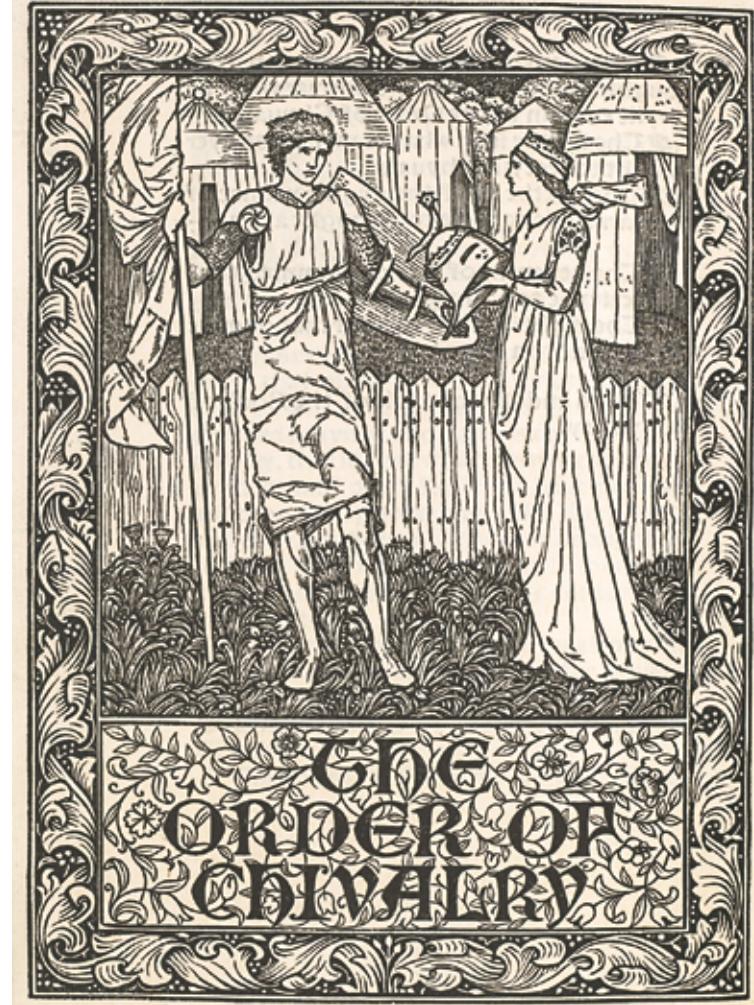

Violet and Columbine

During an age when rooms were stuffed with mass-produced objects and teeming with ornament, Morris challenged people to “have nothing in your houses that you do not know to be useful or believe to be beautiful.”³ Throughout his career, however, there was a tension between Morris’s desire to make high-quality goods widely available and the expense of producing handcrafted items from fine materials, which meant primarily the wealthy could afford them. One of his costly innovations was to return to the natural dyes that had been replaced during his lifetime by garish and fugitive chemical dyes. Evidence of the rich and subtle hues of natural dye is apparent in textiles such as Violet and Columbine, woven from wool and mohair.

The installation of the exhibition William Morris: Designing an Earthly Paradise reflects the character of many Victorian rooms that incorporated products designed by Morris & Co. Richly varied patterns on fabric, wallpaper, and carpets produced a vividly lush effect. The gallery walls are papered with a modern reproduction of Fruit, one of Morris’s earliest wallpaper

The Order of Chivalry by Ramon Llull, translated by William Caxton, and L'Ordene de Chevalerie, translated by William Morris, 1893. Borders, initials, and typeface by William Morris. designs, dating from 1862 and in production for over 150 years. Created with generous assistance from the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, the rug is a full-scale reproduction on vinyl of Bullerswood, the largest hand-knotted Hammersmith carpet (so called for the district where they were originally made) ever produced by Morris & Co.

From Morris’s university days at Oxford through the end of his life, he relied on the camaraderie of friends and family to foster the creative environment in which he delighted and thrived. This was especially true of his final labor of love: Kelmscott Press. Founded in 1890, the press produced beautiful books with ornaments and typefaces designed by Morris. The volumes had much in common with books printed in the earliest years of the printing press. Bound in either vellum or quarter-cloth and paper and printed on high-quality linen paper, they underscore the tactile experience of reading. Several books were illustrated by Morris’s friend Edward Burne-Jones, a successful painter who also designed stained glass and tapestry for Morris & Co. Burne-Jones’s illustration for the frontispiece of The Order of Chivalry shows how seamlessly his gothic style complemented the page’s borders and typeface designed by Morris. The Ingalls Library at the Cleveland Museum of Art is fortunate to have each of the 53 titles printed by the Kelmscott Press.

Morris’s literary masterpiece, The Earthly Paradise, was printed by the press in 1896, the year he died. The epic poem invites the reader to leave behind the grime and noise of modern-day England and become immersed in the author’s dream world, inspired by medieval and classical tales. Morris’s designs and working philosophy combined a vast knowledge of the past with a vision for the future, always inspired by the world around him. ☽

At the end of the 1100s in the country now called Cambodia, a triumphant king named Jayavarman VII built a massive temple far to the northwest of Angkor, the centuries-old capital of the Khmer Empire. Known as Banteay Chhmar, the ruler's "Second Citadel" covered about 1.7 square miles and served as a ritual and administrative center in his newly reimagined kingdom. Jayavarman VII (r. 1181–1218) used military might to expand the Khmer Empire to its greatest extent ever. He consolidated the territories through an unprecedented building program of temples and hospitals. In the latter, survivors of the wars were healed; in the former, the dead were redeemed and their spirits venerated to ensure the prosperity and protection of the realm.

Eight hundred years after the death of Jayavarman VII, an extraordinary, climactic section of the temple at Banteay Chhmar is now on view at the Cleveland Museum of Art. The nine-foot-tall by twelve-foot-wide, four-and-a-half-ton bas-relief sculpture depicts the bodhisattva of compassion in his form as the ten-armed Lokeshvara (also known as Avalokiteshvara, Guanyin, or Kannon), "Lord of the World."

Bas-relief sculptures rank among the especial glories of Cambodian art from the reign of Jayavarman VII. Unlike those from earlier periods, the bas-reliefs

Also on view are highlights from the CMA collection of works of Khmer art dating to the reign of Jayavarman VII. A three-dimensional sandstone head of a Deva gives a clear sense of how the relief figure from Banteay Chhmar was conceived in the round. An important bronze icon of the Buddha seated under the bodhi tree was used to transport the presence of a sacred image from one temple to another around the realm. The exhibition includes ritual objects, statues, and fittings from royal thrones or palanquins. Spectacular photography of the temple site taken by Jaroslav Poncar and digital reconstructions by archaeological architect Olivier Cunin create a transportive experience for visitors.

Banteay Chhmar's location was so remote that after the demise of the Khmer Empire in the mid-1400s, it escaped occupation and alteration by followers of other religions, and thus stands as an important document of Buddhist art and religion during Cambodia's Angkorian period. Its remoteness, however, contributed to its natural collapse from a lack of maintenance, and made it vulnerable of this king mainly depict historical and idealized episodes from his reign, including rituals, festivals, and victorious battles. The ten-armed Lokeshvara is one of eight manifestations of the bodhisattva of compassion that Jayavarman VII, his army, queen Jayarajadevi, heir Prince Vidyanandana, and extended family members traveled to in procession, following the distribution of alms to the populace.

The series of eight Lokeshvaras of Banteay Chhmar is unique not only in the surviving corpus of Cambodian art, but also apparently anywhere in the Buddhist world. They are the culminating images of the staggering 1,765 running feet of bas-relief sculptures at Banteay Chhmar. Carved on the west side of the wall that surrounds the sacred precinct of the temple, demarcating it from the outside world, they face the direction of Buddhism's Western Paradise, opposite the temple entrance. Ten-armed Lokeshvara, featured in the exhibition at Cleveland, stands among smaller figures who pay him homage and imagery that proclaims his superiority over all other gods. He is depicted as having the power to deliver souls from suffering.

to looting. In 1998 four of the eight Lokeshvaras were forcibly removed from their places in the surrounding wall at Banteay Chhmar. Two of them remain in undisclosed locations, and two were seized at the border with Thailand and subsequently transported to the National Museum of Cambodia in Phnom Penh.

In 2015 the National Museum of Cambodia forged a Cultural Cooperation Agreement with the Cleveland Museum of Art, following the transfer of a tenth-century sculpture of Hanuman from Cleveland to Cambodia. The agreement allowed for exceptional works of art to be lent for exhibition at the CMA in order to promote knowledge and appreciation of Cambodia's cultural heritage. As a result, our visitors have the unprecedented opportunity to see the ten-armed Lokeshvara from the temple of Jayavarman VII. ■■■

Creative Heritage

Wadsworth and Jae Jarrell continue to create work that reflects their African roots

EXHIBITION

Heritage: Wadsworth and Jae Jarrell

November 21, 2017–
February 25, 2018

Focus Gallery (010)

Frock You 1994. Jae Jarrell (American, b. 1935). Wool, wood, mixed media; 186.7 x 123.2 x 15.2 cm. Collection of the artist. © Jae Jarrell

The work of Wadsworth and Jae Jarrell exists simultaneously within two spheres, serving as stunning visual objects and as vessels for communicating strong sociopolitical messages. In 1968 the newly wed Jae and Wadsworth founded the collective AfriCOBRA (African Commune of Bad Relevant Artists) with Jeff Donaldson, Barbara J. Jones, and Gerald Williams. Headquartered in Chicago, the group gathered in Wadsworth's studio, uniting around a specific objective: to develop an approach to art that was separate from the dominant, Eurocentric, and marginalizing standards. They sought to create work from a distinct perspective, one intrinsically tied to their background as African Americans.

In a country during a time when the prevailing sentiment remained largely anti-black, AfriCOBRA told the world about the power, persistence, and beauty of African heritage. That mission is one that the Jarrells stand by to this day. Although the husband and wife of 50 years have lived throughout the United States, they now call Cleveland home (the city is Jae's birthplace), living and working in the historic Glenville neighborhood only a mile from the Cleveland Museum of Art. Inspired by the museum's recent acquisition of Heritage, a seminal painting by Wadsworth, Heritage: Wadsworth and Jae Jarrell features more than a dozen dynamic works by both artists from the mid-1960s to now, a stunning array of colorful paintings, sculptures, and textiles that illustrate the couple's keen ability to incite change and to deliver a potent message through visual art.

But what does heritage look like for African Americans? Jae views African heritage as a "grandparent overseeing young upstarts." This mentality is evident in both artists' work throughout their individual careers. During the 1960s and '70s, when racial tensions ran high, for AfriCOBRA the arts served as a methodical tool for restoration and rejuvenation within black communities. Their work used visual culture like an instrument, playing songs about strong black families, civil rights activists, and African American cultural icons. Their work proclaimed that African Americans would no longer tolerate the demoralizing depictions and racial rejection that clouded the truth of their intellectual and social contributions. In the words of Wadsworth, "African people are the forerunners, innovators, creators" and "the hip." These concepts resonate in his work, aptly titled Heritage, in the museum's collection. The dazzling painting implements key elements of AfriCOBRA's carefully formulated aesthetic: vivid "cool-ade colors," free symmetry, dynamically lettered messages, and shiny layers of metallic foil.

Music is extremely important, not only within the context of African American heritage, but for the artists themselves.

Even as Wadsworth began to artistically explore outside the AfriCOBRA guidelines, music genres such as jazz remained a key factor in his work. In fact, the same qualities and influence are seen in the work of both artists. For example, Jae's passion for textile design is exemplified in Scramble Jacket, a meticulously crafted garment that lists the names of black musicians in the style of a crossword puzzle. Beautifully intricate, her work melds images, objects, fabric, and form within striking textiles and sculptures that reflect the rhythms she experiences from African art. More recently, she has approached her work from a broader standpoint, extending beyond the human form. By embedding handmade garments within larger sculptural forms, she constructs a new three-dimensional perspective.

The Jarrells' work demonstrates how African American heritage marries the experiences and history of black people in the United States with the influence and essence of their African roots. As Jae states, both of them are "dealing with cultural references, finding our beginnings, appreciating the preservation of our ancestors, and just seeing the beauty in incorporating that in our work." Today, the couple has expanded beyond the specific parameters of AfriCOBRA, though they will always consider the group as family. ■

Breakfast, anyone? This wry composition by Ralph Steiner is currently on view in From Riches to Rags: American Photography in the Depression. A leading photographer of the era, Steiner was one of five modern masters featured in a photography exhibition organized by the museum in 1934. Renowned for his images of the urban environment, Steiner was also a key figure in bringing modernism's radical visual strategies, which were barely accepted by museums, into American homes. How? Through the pages of popular magazines such as Ladies' Home Journal, Fortune, and Life.

Born in Cleveland into a working-class, Czech immigrant family, Steiner studied at the Clarence H. White School of Photography in New York, a nexus for the introduction of modernism into American photography and advertising. In contrast to the previous era's use of soft focus and romanticized Pictorialist scenes, modernism advocated sharply focused images that emphasized geometric compositions.

Steiner produced this photograph as an illustration for The Delineator, a popular women's magazine. It "represented my revolt when a food editor of a woman's magazine set before my camera a plate of raggedly trimmed ham and two runny eggs," Steiner reminisced. "I ran out to buy six dozen eggs, induced the editor to trim both ham and eggs into perfect Euclidian circles, and made my version of that classic dish." In a more biting recital of the incident, he described the mandala of eggs as "what I did to avoid certification to a mental hospital when told to photograph a plate of ham and eggs. . . . My escape was to amuse myself."

Despite his deprecating remarks, the exquisitely composed and expertly lit Ham and Eggs has become one of Steiner's most beloved images. Whether working on personal projects or commissions, Steiner, always an artist, applied the modernist aesthetic to promoting American products with the goal of merging fine art and commercial photography. ■■■

Conserving for the Future

For objects conservator Beth Edelstein, every object tells a story

Beth Edelstein

Conservator
of Objects

During my last year of college when I was applying to graduate programs in psychology, I read an article about the conservation of a painting of the Crucifixion at a local museum. A conservator had removed darkened varnish and discovered the black sky was actually a deep blue. That was a revelation. I'd never thought about the intersection of science and art—two areas I was fascinated by, independently—and I was hooked.

So I changed my mind about graduate school, and instead traveled to Florence, Italy, to begin studying art conservation. After Florence, I attended graduate school in the United States and then obtained a Mellon Fellowship at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. The Met hired me and I stayed there another ten years. I left the Met this past spring, and the move to Cleveland has been just what I had hoped it would be.

A number of things intrigued me about Cleveland. One was the high quality of the collection. Met colleagues who learned I was coming here said things like, "Wow, what an amazing collection that is. You'll get to work on so many excellent things." At the Met, like in Europe, the field is more specialized, so conservators focus more narrowly on different materials or areas of the collection. It's wonderful to develop such strong expertise, but I also like being able to jump around a bit more. For example, working on The Jazz Age was exciting because it's an object-centered show, with a lot of interesting and unusual materials.

The conservation lab's next major project involves the massive sandstone Krishna Lifting Mount Govardhan. We'll install a hoist and gantry for lifting the pieces of the sculpture apart and reassembling them in a different orientation to accommodate adding a new piece that came to us through the government of Cambodia. The reinstallation of the British galleries is driving a lot of conservation work these days, and we also have a plan for reinstalling the museum's Italian crèche figures.

I did a lot of outreach when I was at the Met, and I'm excited to continue that work here. This country doesn't always value the past. I believe we can start to change that by encouraging young people to think about how important it is to protect objects from our collective history. Conservation begins with a simple observation and question: "Okay, somebody made this—how and why?" And everything that follows that moment of creation is written into the object itself. A conservator is the lucky one who gets to unlock those secrets by asking the same questions as an archaeologist or a criminal investigator. What happened here? What's the story? ■■■

Sisters Holley Fowler Martens (above left) and Chann Fowler-Spellman support the CMA through the foundation started by their parents, Chuck and Char Fowler (right).

On a recent visit to the museum, Holley Fowler Martens accompanied her German exchange student, Fransiska, to work on a school project about artist Elizabeth Catlett's color linoleum cut Sharecropper. The print was in storage, but thanks to cutting-edge technology in the ARTLENS Gallery, Fransiska could view it and learn about other works by Catlett. "I love the Cleveland Museum of Art," she says.

"It's great to see how ARTLENS encourages visitors to engage and connect with art at the museum," says Holley, who serves as president of the Char and Chuck Fowler Family Foundation, her family's philanthropic organization. In 2016 the foundation gave $1 million to ARTLENS Gallery, the CMA's award-winning interactive, intergenerational learning space that brings together art and technology to enrich the museum experience. Museumgoers can learn, create, and play in the gallery, and locate favorites throughout the museum using the ARTLENS App and its wayfinding technology.

"As a foundation, we look for ideas outside the box that increase public access to the arts. ARTLENS is one of those ideas," explains Chann Fowler-Spellman, a trustee of the family foundation established by Chann and Holley's parents, Charles (Chuck) and Charlotte (Char) Fowler.

Located near the museum's north entrance, ARTLENS Gallery is often the first stop for visitors, and its use of technology complements the traditional museum experience. It's a natural fit for younger arts patrons, whose lives often revolve around smartphones and the latest technologies.

"ARTLENS is a great step in understanding that the audience is changing," says Chuck Fowler, director of the board of Fairmount Santrol and co-founder and former chief executive officer of Fairmount Minerals. "Technology enhances the overall museum experience while appealing to a new generation of art lovers."

"This is such an incredible museum," Char Fowler adds. "I love to see people using the technology and getting excited about art. It's a great tool for discovering something new." ■

The Return of the Bronze Blue Herons

Two blue heron drinking fountains have come home to roost along the east and west banks of Wade Lagoon, thanks to a generous gift from Cleveland civic leader Allen Ford, a retired senior executive with the Standard Oil Company. They are skillful replicas of bronze fountains sculpted by Emilie Fiero and installed in 1928, then stolen in 1980. In April, Allen and his family gathered at the lagoon to celebrate the installation of the new fountains, placed in their original locations.

A frequent lagoon visitor, Allen made the gift in memory of his late wife, Constance Towson Ford, a teacher and artist with a passion for gardening. She was a member of the Fine Arts Garden Commission and past chair of the Cleveland Botanical Garden. "I wanted to have something at University Circle to honor my wife," says Allen, who at one time carved birds from wood, including a blue heron.

Allen and his family foundation, the Abington Foundation, are longtime CMA supporters. The foundation gave generously to Transformation: The Campaign for the Cleveland Museum of Art. Allen also supported the campaign in honor of his wife's commitment to education through the Connie Towson Ford Teacher Resource Center. The center helps educators use the collection to create engaging classroom experiences. "This museum is a great asset for Cleveland," Allen says. "I'm proud that we have been a part of it."

Bringing Artwork to Life

For more than a decade, Homer and Gertrude (Gert) Chisholm have actively participated in the museum's Painting and Drawing Society. Gert is a past president, while Homer co-chairs the Travel Committee. When they learned that a prominent painting in the museum's collection needed a new frame, they quickly stepped in to help. Thanks to the couple's generosity and passion for art, Pan and Syrinx, a 1720 painting by Jean François de Troy, now has an exquisitely hand-carved antique frame that matches the work's quality and beautifully echoes its Rococo subject. "To be able to enhance a work of art means the world to us," Homer says.

In 2008 the Chisholms made a significant gift to Transformation: The Campaign for the Cleveland Museum of Art. In light of the awe-inspiring renovation project, Homer notes that "the CMA was always well regarded, but now it's even more of a cultural jewel and community asset."

In a show of confidence for the museum's future, Gert recently made a legacy commitment by gifting a life insurance policy. "We have been so blessed," she says. "It's important to return our good fortune to the community."

PNC: Building a Thriving Community

At the Cleveland Museum of Art, preschool students learn a worldview through exposure to global collections. Their early jump on arts appreciation comes courtesy of StART SmART, a program launched in 2009 and funded by PNC.

Through family programming and professional development for teachers, StART SmART builds new audiences by creating partnerships with schools whose students might not otherwise have access to the

Korean Art on Display

Sihyung Lee, president of the Korea Foundation; Sooa McCormick, assistant curator of Korean art; and William Griswold, director of the Cleveland Museum of Art, celebrate the opening of the Chaekgeori exhibition.

Exhibition Spotlights Korea Foundation Partnership

Since its establishment in 1991, the Korea Foundation has worked to enhance partnerships with the world's leading museums through its culture and arts programs. In 2013, based on the strength of the Cleveland Museum of Art's remarkable collection of Korean art that it began building in 1915, the foundation provided generous support for the museum's Korea Foundation Gallery—the first such gallery in the museum's history and the only one of its kind in Ohio.

The foundation's sponsorship of the exhibition Chaekgeori: Pleasure of Possessions in Korean Painted Screens (on view through November 5) is the latest example of the deep friendship between the two organizations. Sihyung Lee, president of the Korea Foundation, visited Cleveland to witness firsthand the exhibition and the museum's collection.

"It was a tremendous honor that Mr. Lee not only attended the opening reception but also shared his thoughts on the Chaekgeori show and the Cleveland Museum of Art with our guests," director William Griswold says. "We were proud to give him a tour of the Korea Foundation Gallery, which has been so greatly admired by visitors from all over the world."

museum. The program aligns with Grow Up Great, a PNC initiative to enhance early childhood education and to introduce a new generation to the museum.

"As Clevelanders, we are so lucky to have a strong arts and cultural community in University Circle and beyond," says Paul Clark, PNC regional president for Cleveland. "Not only is the museum a wonderful place to visit an art collection known around the world, it is one of many economic development drivers in our region."

In addition to early childhood education, PNC sponsors the monthly MIX events and Studio Go, the CMA's mobile art studio that delivers hands-on art experiences to neighborhoods across northeast Ohio. "It's that connection to existing and new audiences that helps the museum strengthen its foundation," Clark says.

Art and Giving Back Inspire This Family

Kate Wensink loves to explore art. Growing up in Michigan, she frequently visited the Detroit Institute of Arts where she immersed herself in its diverse collection. In college, she took a few art classes while pursuing her law degree.

vision to other professionals and the community.

Kate was inspired to join the museum during a visit to the Van Gogh exhibition in 2014. "I realized that we had come to so many exhibitions over the years," she says. "We had taken so much from the museum and I knew it was time to give back. We joined that day and our involvement and commitment keep growing." Kate recently renewed the membership at the President's Circle level, a patron group that actively supports the museum through annual gifts. She also belongs to the Womens Council.

Coming to the museum is a family affair for Kate, her husband, Neil, and sons Carter, 11, and Jack, 8. "We're fortunate to live in a city with one of the finest art museums in the world," she says. Both boys have attended lectures, and their appreciation for art extends beyond the armor court. The pair of bronze Cambodian sculptures depicting Hanuman are family favorites. Carter also enjoys Fabergé objects from the decorative art and design collection and No. 2 (Red Maroons) by Mark Rothko in the contemporary art galleries.

Of course, Neil says, it's also fun to sit in the Ames Family Atrium and locate the exact spot where Captain America landed after falling through its glass ceiling.

Best of all? Jack has the answer: "It's free!"

Medical Mutual Supports a Community Icon

Debra Green remembers the thrill of visiting the Cleveland Museum of Art as a schoolgirl. "We were expected to dress up in our nicest clothes and be on our best behavior," she recalls. "It was such a privilege to come here." Decades later, Debra wore a fancy dress and headwrap and danced to steel-drum music as part of Parade the Circle, the museum's blockbuster annual event for kids of all ages.

Debra relishes her role as vice president of social responsibility at Medical Mutual, through which she helps children and families enjoy all that the museum has to offer. Medical Mutual has entered into a multi-year commitment to support three vital programming areas at the museum: Performing Arts, including Ohio City Stages, Solstice, and free public programs; Community Arts, including Parade the Circle and Chalk Festival; and Play Days, Sunday events offering free, family-friendly activities.

"The Cleveland Museum of Art is an icon in the community," Debra says. "At Medical Mutual, we support organizations that enrich the lives of our employees, our customers, and our community. The Cleveland Museum of Art is one of those places."

Advancing Philanthropy

New Chief Philanthropy Officer John Easley celebrates the museum's rich history of philanthropy and looks forward to a new century of giving

Earlier this year John Easley joined the museum's executive team as chief philanthropy officer. This latest role builds on his 40-year career as a development and marketing executive for leading art and cultural institutions, including service as vice president and chief philanthropy officer for the St. Louis Symphony, director of development and external affairs for the Minneapolis Institute of Art, vice president of development and external affairs for the Saint Louis Art Museum, director of external affairs for the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art in Kansas City, and president of the Museum of New Mexico Foundation in Santa Fe. Under his direction, these institutions' combined capital and endowment campaigns have generated nearly $1 billion in community support.

"I have a passion for this work because I believe it really makes a difference," Easley says. "Great art museums define the quality of community life. They bring people together and they celebrate the best that humanity is capable of producing."

As chief philanthropy officer, Easley leads staff and volunteers in the Department of Philanthropy and External Affairs in the development of marketing and fundraising goals and strategies that encourage philanthropic investment in the museum and its mission. "While the CMA is fortunate to have a significant base of endowment funding," he says, "ongoing support from members and donors is vital to providing the resources necessary to care for our collections, to continue scholarship and research, and to deliver a range and quality of exhibitions, education, and community programs that will help us fully realize our mission."

The museum's rich tradition of offering free admission to all is made possible only through philanthropic support. "The CMA we enjoy today represents a remarkable legacy of more than 100 years of generous giving and stewardship by extraordinary Clevelanders," Easley says. "As in our first century, the CMA of the 21st century will be shaped by the generosity of our friends and benefactors. It is our privilege to build on all that they have given us and to celebrate those who help ensure that the second century will be even brighter than the first." ■

PERFORMANCE

Free Concert

Ji Aeri Sun/Nov 5, 2:00, Gartner Auditorium. In conjunction with the exhibition Chaegeori: Pleasure of Possessions in Korean Painted Screens, kayagum virtuoso Ji Aeri performs an intimate concert of Korean music both traditional and contemporary. The kayagum, a zither-like instrument with 12 strings, is related to the Japanese koto and the Chinese guzheng. Ji Aeri learned to play kayagum from Hwang Byungki, the master musician who played a crucial role in disseminating traditional Korean music in the West and developing contemporary music for the instrument. This rare performance takes place on the closing day of the Korean screens exhibition. Free; ticket required.

Chamber Music in the Galleries

Wed/Nov 1, 6:00. Wed/Dec 6, 6:00. The series of monthly chamber music concerts continues, featuring young artists from the Cleveland Institute of Music and the joint program with Case Western Reserve University's early and baroque music programs. Outstanding conservatory musicians present mixed repertoire ranging from the standard to unknown gems amid the museum's collections for a unique and intimate experience—often featuring instruments from the museum's keyboard collection. These early-evening, hour-long performances are a delightful after-work encounter or the start of a night out.

SQÜRL: Jim Jarmusch and Carter Logan

Acclaimed filmmaker Jim Jarmusch (whose breakout movie was the shot-in-Cleveland Stranger Than Paradise with its memorable soundtrack featuring Screaming Jay Hawkins) brings his singular music and film project to the museum stage. Jarmusch (electric guitar) and Carter Logan (drums) perform as SQÜRL, a self-described "enthusiastically marginal rock band from New York City." Jarmusch and Logan started scoring music for film in 2009, culminating most recently in Jarmusch's films Only Lovers Left Alive and Paterson. This evening's program features Jarmusch and Logan's scores for four silent films by American Dada and Surrealist artist Man Ray. Relying heavily on loops, synthesizers, and effected guitars, the semi-improvised performances drift toward the band's more experimental, ambient, and drone-like tendencies. Followed by an onstage conversation with Jarmusch and Logan hosted by curator Reto Thüring.

Echoes of the Jazz Age in 1930s Sound Films

Although the Jazz Age ended with the start of the Great Depression, trends and trappings from that ebullient era carried over into 1930s movies. This is understandable given the lengthy production time of feature films. But the carryover also made artistic sense; sound technology introduced during the late 1920s now allowed filmgoers to hear the Jazz Age on screen.

The feature films in this short series were released during the Depression, but they all showcase Jazz Age sensibilities. Three of the movies feature some of the 1920s biggest musical attractions: Paul Whiteman and His Orchestra, Paris-based American singer and dancer Josephine Baker, and African American Broadway sensations Eubie Blake and Noble Sissle. The Jazz Age's obsession with skyscrapers and department stores, as well as its loose sexual morals, is seen in Baby Face and Employees' Entrance, two classics made before Hollywood's strict enforcement of the repressive Hays Code. And the era's fascinations with air travel, wild parties, and masked balls all converge in Madam Satan, a deranged, dirigible-set disaster movie by Cecil B. DeMille.

Unless noted, all shown in Morley Lecture Hall and admission to each program is $10, CMA members $7.

King of Jazz Sat/Nov 4, 5:00. Sun/Nov 5, 6:30. Directed by John Murray Anderson. With Bing Crosby et al. Popular 1920s bandleader Paul Whiteman headlines this all-star review, in color! (USA, 1930, 100 min.) Co-presented by the Cleveland Institute of Art Cinematheque and shown in the Peter B. Lewis Theater, 11610 Euclid Ave.

PRE-CODE DOUBLE FEATURE!

Baby Face Directed by Alfred Green. Employees' Entrance Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Sun/Nov 12, 1:30. Tue/Nov 14, 1:45.

Two surprisingly salacious "working girl" classics from the racy Pre-Code era. In the first, ambitious NYC bartender Barbara Stanwyck sleeps her way from the basement to the penthouse. The second tells of a ruthless department store manager who exploits his female employees (Loretta Young et al.) because jobs are hard to come by during the Depression. Preserved by the Library of Congress. (Each film: USA, 1933, 75 min.)

Zouzou Sun/Nov 26, 1:30. Tue/Nov 28, 1:45. Directed by Marc Allégret. With Josephine Baker and Jean Gabin. The American-born Josephine Baker, a Jazz Age sensation in Paris, made her sound film debut in this French drama about a laundress who becomes a musical theater star. (France, 1934, subtitles, 92 min.) Preceded at showtime by the early sound short Noble Sissle & Eubie Blake (1923, 7 min.), preserved by the Library of Congress.

Madam Satan Sun/Dec 10, 1:30. Tue/Dec 12, 1:45. Directed by Cecil B. DeMille. With Kay Johnson, Reginald Denny, and Lillian Roth. To win back her straying husband, a wife dons a seductive disguise during an elaborate masquerade ball on an ill-fated zeppelin. Cecil B. DeMille's outlandish extravaganza may be the screen's first disaster movie. (USA, 1930, b&w, DVD, 105 min.) Preceded at showtime by Lindbergh's Flight (1927, 13 min.), a Fox Movietone sound newsreel.

A New Look at the Great Harlem Renaissance Photographer James Van Der Zee

James Van Der Zee dedicated his career to creating images of African Americans that would undermine persistent derogatory depictions. During the Harlem Renaissance, his photographic portraits most often captured an urban, black elite, showcasing Harlem's cosmopolitan set. In his portraits, jewels sparkle, shoes shine, and fashion dominates, suggesting that things are as important to an image's meaning as the person donning them. Close attention to minute details and compositional tensions reveals a new way of viewing these images. Please join me for this guided close-looking session of two of Van Der Zee's portraits on view in the exhibition From Riches to Rags.

What Lies Beneath: Seeing the Unseen in Works of Art

The Jazz Age features all that glitters and shines in the 1920s. The restless desire for new fashions, new technologies, and new ways of understanding "the good life" permeates these visions, but what we cannot immediately see are the racial tensions, class strife, and women's calls for political recognition that also pervade this era. Inaugurating the series What Lies Beneath: Seeing the Unseen in Works of Art, this panel discussion Beyond the Glamour: Considering Race and Inequality in an Era of Opulence, on Saturday, December 16, considers how race and inequality, while not seemingly present on the surface of these works, ghost their glimmer.

Beyond the Glamour: Considering Race and Inequality in an Era of Opulence Sat/Dec 16, 10:30–11:30, Recital Hall. Free; ticket required. Ticketed tour of the exhibition follows; adults $15, senior/student $13, children $7, CMA members free. Limit 25.

Art Together Family Workshops

Art Together is about families making, sharing, and having fun together in the galleries and in the studio. Each workshop is a unique hands-on experience that links art making to one of our special exhibitions. Artworks inspire exploration of a wide variety of art techniques and materials. Whether you attend one workshop or participate in the whole series, we encourage you and your family to make art together.

Ceramics Workshop Sun/Nov 19, 1:00–3:30. Hands on, all the way. Families build clay lanterns inspired by the motifs in Beyond Angkor. Learn slab-building and glazing techniques. Fired works ready for pick-up by December 15. Each family member $20, CMA members $18. Register now.

Collage Workshop Sun/Jan 21, 1:00–3:30. Families use multimedia techniques to create vibrant works of art. Paper, glue, foil, and paint are just some of our materials, and the Wadsworth Jarrell exhibition is our inspiration. Each family member $20, CMA members $18. Register now.

Save the dates! The next workshop is February 18.

Mini-Sessions Expand Selection of Studio Classes

The museum's studio art classes have long been presented in eight-week sessions. While this format allows students the time to deeply explore a medium and to finely hone skills, the two-month time commitment was impractical for some potential students. With the introduction of new four-week mini-sessions—all for a standard fee of $100 or $75 for CMA members—studio classes are now within reach for more people. For children and teens, classes are usually six sessions; this December the museum also offers two three-class mini-sessions for kids.

ADULT STUDIO MINI-SESSIONS

Explore Jazz Age Sheet Music in the Art Study Room

During the 1920s, sheet music and recordings brought popular songs of every subject and style into homes and music venues across the US. This program focuses on the evolution and style of popular sheet music, which represented a mix of music, design, literature, and photographs of Jazz Age artists and bands. Daniel Goldmark, professor and director of CWRU's Center for Popular Music Studies, shares vintage sheet music, talks about the novelty, humor, and risqué nature of popular tunes of the era, and shares period recordings. Enjoy live performances on the ukulele, a popular instrument of the Jazz Age. Free; ticket required. Limit 35. —DM

GALLERY 217

For a limited time in November and early December, a copy after the museum's masterpiece by Caravaggio, The Crucifixion of Saint Andrew, will be on view in the Donna and James Reid Gallery (217). On loan from a European private collection, the painting will provide visitors with a rare opportunity to compare the hand of the master with that of a copyist who is thought to have been a contemporary of Caravaggio.

GALLERIES 231 AND 232

Every August the museum changes its displays of ancient Andean (Peruvian) and Native North American textiles in galleries 231 (Sarah P. and William R. Robertson Gallery) and 232 to limit their exposure to light, which causes fading. This year's Andean display showcases the achievements of the Paracas—one of the earliest cultures to contribute to the region's millennia-long textile tradition, among the world's most distinguished in both artistic and technical terms. The Paracas (700 BC–AD 1) lived on Peru's south coast, a bone-dry desert that fostered preservation of the fabrics, which were buried in offerings and in the tombs of the honored dead.

Most artistically elaborate Andean textiles served as garments. Among them, the tunic (shirt) was an essential item of men's wear, its ornamentation and method of fabrication often signaling prestige and prosperity. Three tunics, all with different decorative techniques, anchor the Paracas display. Most colorful is this example, which features a striking, large-scale figure with an elaborate, monkey-like tail as well as head appendages that mark it as supernatural. The tunic, a relatively rare type, was made not on a loom but rather by working the yarns into loops with a needle.

The smaller Native North American display features two Diné (Navajo) textiles, one made for native wear and the other for sale to white outsiders. Both are decorated with geometric motifs that have long histories in the Southwest, at least one predating the arrival of Spaniards in 1540.
